Two-Part Harmony

Enjoy double delights with a curated pair of Chinese wines. 288

A centuries-old history lies behind China's wine story, but it was not until 1892 that the first winery as we know it emerged in Shandong, a coastal province that is still recognised as one of the country's largest wine-growing regions. Fast forward 100 years and winemakers across the globe started to see the potential of the terroir and began investing in the different regions. In the years since, China has become the second-largest wine area in the world in terms of land dedicated to vineyards with 12 regions spread over lush plateaus and blazing deserts and a continuously growing list of wineries.

Xinjiang

One of the more remote growing locations, Xinjiang is tucked along the border in China's northwest and is the country's largest region of wine production. Many of the vineyards lie at the foot of the Tian Shan Mountain range with the rest scattered across 70,000 square miles in the east, Ili and Turpan. From the mountainous, hilly terrain come wines that are light and uncomplicated with very low acidity and based on French wine making traditions, as well as a collection of unique, traditional wines, known as museles, produced using old folk recipes that have been passed down for a millennia.

In the southern foothills of the Tian Shan Mountains, and on the same path as the ancient Silk Road, sits Tiansai Vineyard. Cradled between mountains and lakes, the vines enjoy long days of sunlight, warmth and soil nurtured by pure water, creating the perfect condition for natural and organic grape growing and the winemaking process. Since 2010, the renowned winery has produced a diverse portfolio of varietals receiving over 65 international awards of recognition for their outstanding work.

Ningxia

Have burst onto the scene in recent years, Ningxia has become somewhat of a superstar wine region in the nation, famous for its Bordeaux blends that have not escaped international attention. In 2011, at a wine tasting competition pitting Bordeaux wines against those from Ningxia, it was the underdog to the iconic French region, however it was Ningxia that walked away with four of five winning wines. Situated at the base of Helan Mountain and in a heavily irrigated valley between the Yellow River, the region has become home to some of China's most promising, dynamic wineries.

At one of the highest altitudes for a winery and near the imposing tombs of the Xixia kings, Legacy Peak winery sits protected by the isolated, desert Helan Mountain range with an ample supply of groundwater to nourish the vines. Founded in 1997, the vineyard has some of the rarest vines in China, with some over 18 years old resulting in extensive root systems producing highly concentrated grapes. While the winery first provided their grapes to others, it was in 2010 that founder Liu Hai launched his own wines and partnered with Edouard Duval, sixth generation to Champagne Duval-Leroy, one of the last independent family wineries in Champagne.

For Xiao Pu founder Ian Dai, the motivation for starting his own winery was due to the lack of appealing domestic options at the time, he wanted to make something that he himself would want to drink and they Bordeaux style of most Chinese wines did not inspire him. As one of the first wine-making projects founded by a Chinese sommelier, the original aim was express Ningxia's terroir in the simplest, most modest traditional ways. This dedication shifted Dai into a philosophical direction of natural winemaking, with the aim to make the best Chinese wine on the market.

The Starting Point Winery is located at the East Helan Mountain Area in Ningxia. The winery has an old vine vineyard imported from France over 20 years ago. At the same time, in order to obtain the best quality grape, we have successively selected around 13 hectares from hundreds of hectares of vineyards, adhering to the concept of reducing manual intervention, respecting nature and making all things harmoniously coexist, while carefully cultivating vineyards by referring to natural farming methods. Traditional concepts are combined with modern facilities and technologies to produce organic, natural wines.

Yunnan

On the southwestern border is Yunnan, a province home to a number of small wineries, all dispersed throughout due to the mountainous terrain and hilly areas making it difficult to cultivate. The region has nonetheless garnered interest from industry giants such as Moët Hennessy, who have recently taken to growing organic grapes for red wine production in the Shangri-La region. While further to the south than usually favourable, the high elevation, the highest of which lies nearly 2,500 meters above sea level, results in a great deal of direct sunlight creating desirable conditions for high-quality viticultural production.
